THE STREETS OF LIVABLE CITIES

Victor Dover, cofounder Dover, Kohl & Partners Town Planning is an avid bike commuter and expert on how to fix our streets, and in the process shape enduring cities that people really love. He lectures widely around the nation on the topics of livable communities and sustainable development, and was national chair of the Congress for the New Urbanism (CNU) from 2010 to 2012. Victor has been designing walkable, sustainable communities for 25 years and his work spans five continents and ranges from revitalizing historic downtowns to retrofitting suburbia.

ECONOMIC VALUE OF HISTORIC PRESERVATION

Clay Henderson, Esq., President Florida Trust for Historic Preservation will be discussing the economic value of historic preservation to communities that value their heritage assets. Clay is a titan of Florida environmental and historic preservation policy. He was recently selected as executive director of Stetson University's newly established Institute for Water and Environmental Resilience. For the last 15 years, he has been senior counsel at the national law firm of Holland & Knight, focusing on environmental and water law.

LOCAL FOOD

Ed Chiles, Chiles Restaurant Group CEO, is a passionate supporter of all things local and sustainable. He owns three waterfront restaurants and Gamble Creek Farm that supplies much of the produce his restaurants use. Menu items include local heritage seafood dishes such as grey striped mullet and Sunray Venus clams. Ed is a leader in developing the Gulf Coast's blue economy as an economic engine and promoting full utilization of our heritage sustainable seafood through his Gulf Coast Heritage Seafood Project.

JOHN NOLEN: LANDSCAPE ARCHITECT AND CITY PLANNER

Bruce Stephenson, Ph.D. is the Director of the Department of Environmental Studies and Sustainable Urbanism at Rollins College. His books, editorials and journal contributions examine the intersection of environmentalism and city planning and authenticity as an overlooked factor in economic development. Bruce is a Florida Humanities Council scholar and contributor to the PBS documentary, "Imagining a New Florida." He will be discussing and signing copies of his new book, John Nolen: Landscape Architect and City Planner.

All programs are FREE, open to the public, and held at Venice Community Center
